- ▶ « The Ruger Mini-14, used in the infamous Montreal massacre on December 6, 1989, is a compact, lightweight, semi-automatic rifle with detachable magazines chambered for the same cartridges as the M-16 and AK-47, respectively. It is still sold as a hunting rifle although the large capacity magazine is prohibited. Canada's 1995 legislation was designed to allow firearms "not reasonably used in hunting" to be prohibited through Order in Council. Similarly, in Canada, lobbying by the Dominion Rifle of Canada Association, a veterans' group that target shoots with the AR-15, was successful in keeping that firearm off the prohibited list. It is still sold as a restricted weapon. On the eve of the tenth anniversary of the Montreal massacre (December 5, 1999) the Canadian Justice Minister (now Deputy Prime Minister) Anne McLellan, indicated that the Government would follow through with the prohibitions once registration of firearms was complete. However, no action has been taken. »
